

50 States of McMansion Hell: Campbell County, Wyoming

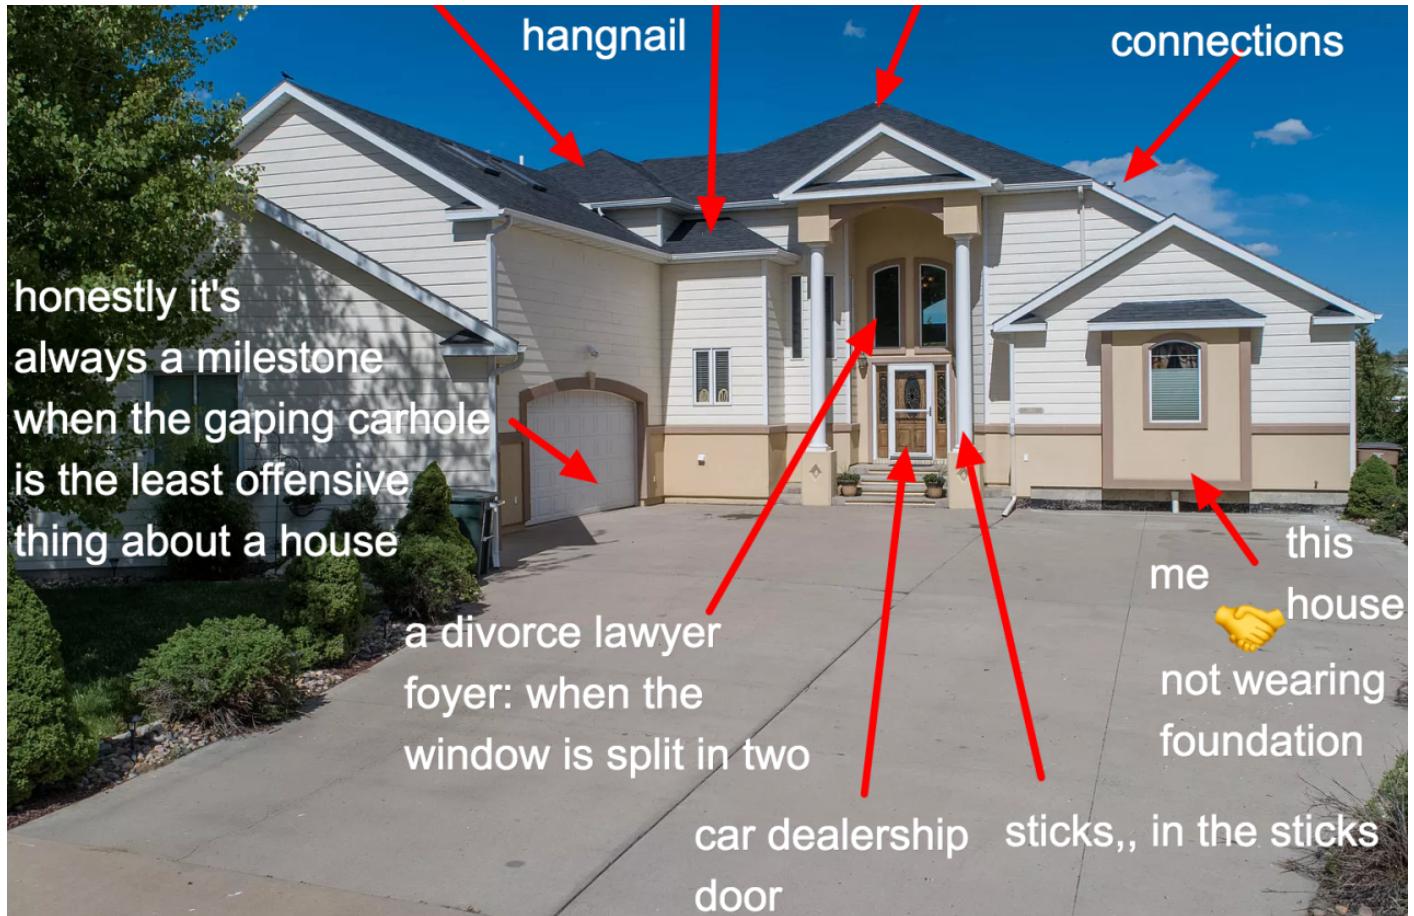

Aug 17, 2019 • 5,435 notes

Howdy, folks! It's time for us to go home, (big, ugly) home on the range. That's right: It's time for Wyoming. Now, when I think Wyoming, I think of rolling hills, ranches, incredible landscapes, and also that book about cowgirls that Dick Cheney's wife wrote.

On that note:

McMansion Hell

This beautiful 5 bed/4.5 bath 6,000 square foot house was built in 2002. It can be all yours for around.

Let's mosey on down through this here estate.

Divorce Lawyer Foyer/Living Room

McMansion Hell

Now, I've been an architecture enthusiast for about a decade of my short, two and a half decade life and never have I seen something as both absurd and patently useless as whatever the hell that thing separating the foyer and the living room is. Does it have a structural purpose? No. Does it have an aesthetic purpose? Also no.

Kitchen

let's play a fun game of "tile or linoleum"

my nemesis, the island
stove/wall oven combo,
has returned for a final battle

look at all the very useful space!!
economical!!!

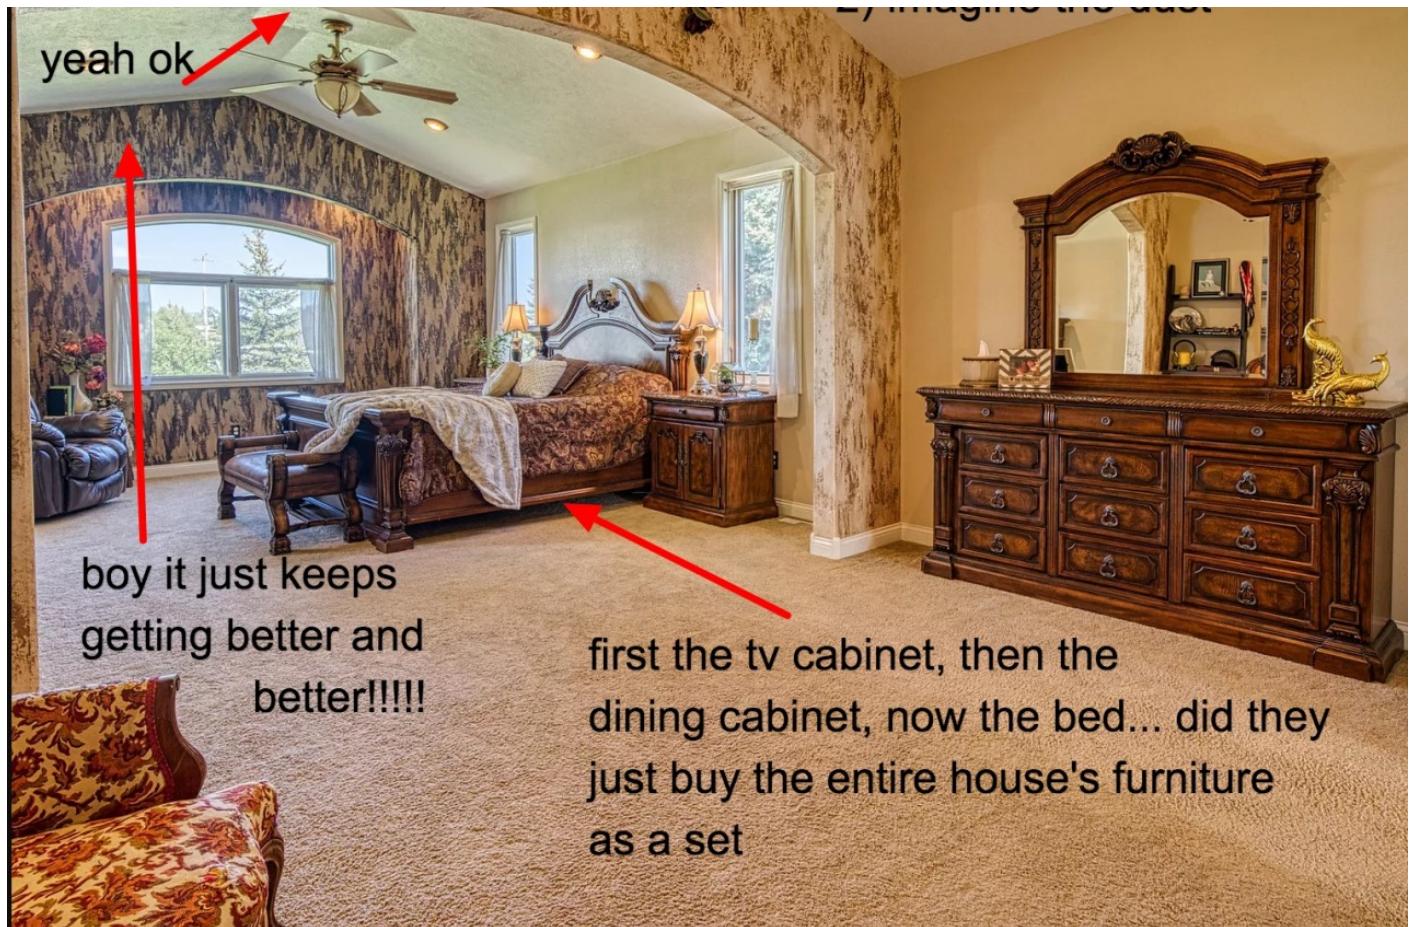

(Running for president voice) "Folks, when I become president, I assure you that the injustice - the absolute tyranny - that is the island stovetop/wall oven combo will finally—" (crowd cheering) "— and I mean finally, be put deep into the ground where it belongs."

Dining Room

The aged bronze chandeliers must have been on ultra clearance. Personally, as someone who loves a good deal, I cannot shame them for this.

Master Bedroom

What I can't determine is what they were going for with the sponge paint on the walls. My closest approximation is tree bark, in which case what we see before us in fact is deeply offensive to the trees, who are innocent and don't deserved to be involved in any of this.

Master Bathroom

I don't care how nostalgic we as a culture get for the late nineties/early aughts, sponge paint should never come back. One, it's sponge paint. Two, it is ridiculously labor intensive and frankly we could all be spending our last few years on this still-habitable earth doing something more worthwhile with our time, such as going outside or falling in love or destroying our brains on the internet.

You are seriously not ready for this immense reddit.com/r/malelivingspace energy

ok but also this room is like a living /r/relationships post, like: dear reddit, my [42 F] son [17 M] refuses to bathe. When I tell him he needs to bathe he tells me that bathing is technology and technology is inherently "bourgeois". What do I do?

When making this picture I realized I desperately need to log off.

Bathroom 2

McMansion Hell

Computer, enhance.

Ok but you can't even read that in the shower. If you're that desperate for prophetic, non-digital bathroom reading material, buy a bottle of Dr. Bronners or, like, a copy of War and Peace.

Basement

like many things in rural america, the items in this room are miles away from one another. the items in this room are like:
"every winter is treacherous. when we are low on kindling and supplies, it takes 3 days for my father to reach town by horseback. last year, little julie almost didn't make it to the spring."

Poor Little Julie. :(

Well, that wraps up our interior. Now, for the final frontier, on the frontier:

Rear Exterior

Somehow this house looks more like it's made out of cardboard than the many, many houses on this blog that also look like they're made out of cardboard.

Anyways, that does it for Wyoming! Stay tuned for next week's Brutalism Post, Part II: What Brutalism is Not. Have a great weekend, folks.
